City of Dublin Launches
New Economic Development Web Site

(Dublin, Ohio) – Business executives surfing the Internet for information on available properties, demographics, broadband infrastructure and where to find capital need look no further than www.DublinEconDev.com.

The City of Dublin has launched a new Economic Development Web site, which may be accessed through its own Web address or from the City’s award-winning site at www.dublin.oh.us.

The new site was initiated as a way to provide site selectors and C-level executives (CEOs, COOs and CFOs) with a one-stop address providing search criteria when looking for a location to create, move or expand their business, said Dublin Deputy City Manager/Director of Economic Development Dana McDaniel.

“Companies can search available properties by simply clicking on the type of space needed such as industrial, office or retail,” McDaniel said. “They also can discover a wealth of information through links to other business resources. For example, in just two clicks from the home page, a CEO can be looking at available incentives through the Ohio Department of Development or customized training programs offered through the OSU Fisher College of Business.”

The Web site incorporates the City’s Economic Development brand, Live, Learn, Work, Create in Dublin, and a new look featuring cloud images to illustrate the different elements of the brand, which is accompanied by the theme, “In Dublin, Ohio the sky’s the limit.”
